Andover Visited

We went to Andover, Sunday. It was a nice warm, hazy day, last Sunday. We left at 10:30 a. m. and arrived in Andover at 1:30 p. m. We went via: Trap Corner, Bethel, West side Ellis River, and returned over the same route, distance 102.7 miles. A little of the mileage was made in making calls in Andover. About six miles of bad roads were found.

We have not been in Andover since Saturday, June 27th, when four trout were caught in the Dunn Meadows, West Surplus. Mosquitoes were plenty and the birds sang joyously, but the fish were not there at that time.

We had dinner at the Milton House. The rumor that this house is to be closed is wrong. It will be kept open. Ernest Milton, son of the late W. Milton, is the landlord. His sister, Mrs. Nellie Perry, has been here since the death of her father. She is soon to go to her home in Massachusetts, but the Milton House will not be closed.

We met Bill Cloughlin, Henry Poor, Charles Jolley, Frank and Albert Allen, and the two latter were cutting wood for the spool mill. Frank Allen showed us a 13 point buck he recently got on the ridge, near Cedar Hill, Lake Road. The buck was good size, with splendid head. He is to have the head mounted.

Middle Dam keeper, Rancey Miller, has regained his health and is all right. Sam Chase has come out from Thayer's camp and is stopping at Doran's. Mrs. Helen Kimball is at Will Mitchell's, if in Andover. Her house was closed.

Miss Jane Gregg, 95 come Marell, was called on. She is a sister of the late Edna Gregg and an aunt of Malcolm Gregg of Norway and Andover. She was bright, cheerful, and pleased to have callers.

Capt. E. F. Coburn and wife were seen. They were carpenters working on the Andover home and of course pretty much broke up in their house. That is what they do. We understand they are not going to Florida as planned. It is too expensive. Ed can't get sufficient money out of his summer business to live as he would want to live in the Sunny South, so he is to remain in Andover and build a house.

South Bethel. Capt. E. F. Coburn and wife were seen. They were carpenters working on the Andover home and of course pretty much broke up in their house. That is what they do. NORTH BRIDGTON

Bridgton Academy, with one of the finest football teams in the history of the school hung up a record of which it is justly proud. In a total of nine games played, Bridgton Academy won six games and lost three, and in so doing they piled up a total of 147 points to their opponents' 35. In the first three games, only three first downs were registered against them in as many games. Out of a squad of thirty men reporting at the Chadbourne Athletic Field each night, fifteen men were successful in making their letter. The certificates and letters were awarded to the members of the teams a few days ago and the suits and equipment handed in to await the call of another season. The school record of games is as follows:

B. A. 32 Gardner H. S. 0
B. A. 32 Berwick Acad. 0
B. A. 13 Thornton Acad. 7
B. A. 8 Bates Freshmen 7
B. A. 8 Westbrook H. S. 7
B. A. 8 Fryburg Acad. 0
B. A. 8 Bowdoin Fresh. 0
B. A. 8 Fryburg Acad. 12
B. A. 19 Winslow High 6

Although basketball did not start in earnest at Bridgton Academy until after the Thanksgiving holidays, coach Small has had several candidates out in the M. E. Ingalls' gymnasium in order to get a line upon the material for applicants. At the present time, basketball practice will start and each student is required to take some form of physical exercise until Easter. The first schedule game is with Parisfield Secondary on Thursday, December 3rd. On the next night, the team goes to Berlin, N. H.

There are several men from last year around whom a team is to be formed, they are: Portland, Bowdoin, Fryburg, Hutchings of Gardner, and Charlie Hill of East Hiram; Kenneth Sampson, who played last year will not be able to start this season because of a recent operation. He is expected to return in the fall. The team is without a manager as a new one has not been selected for his vacancy. New men reporting for practice are Jimmie Norton of Portland, Whopper Deaton of Portland, Roy Clement of East Hiram, Charlie Ellsworth of Roxbury, Mass.; Lester Pinkham of Saco, Elroy Syphers of Cornish, and Timothy Murphy of Lewiston. Men from the second string last year who will make a great bid for the team are Eugene Tenney and Stanley Whitney of Harrison, Austin Brigham of North Bridgton, Curtis Adams of North Bridgton, Wynne Ward of Portland, Milford Combs of Lewiston, and Lawrence Brigham of No. Bridgton.

Games are arranged with Thornton Academy, Biddeford High, Portland University, Portland Boys' Club, Gorbant High, and Fryburg Academy. Also tentative dates are with Hebron, Kent's Hill, M. C. L. Coburn Classical, Kennebunkport, Lincoln Academy, and Dexter High.

A series of Class basketball games have been started at Bridgton Academy and excitement is waxing high. The first game held on Thursday evening, was a hotly contested fray from the first whistle. This game was between the Special Students and the Seniors. For the Seniors, Tudor Hutchings and Charlie Hill showed up in fine form, while for the Specials, Jimmie Norton and Jimmie Deaton were the outstanding lights with Ellsworth showing much flashy work. Next Monday evening the Juniors are to play the freshmen and sophomores, while on Tuesday the winners of the two matches and the losers are to play it off. The entire student body turned out from 6:30 to 7:30, and divided on opposite sides at the Ingalls' gymnasium. They kept their respective sides well enthused.

Ellsworth, 2 and 2 fouls, ft. Norton, 7 and 1 foul, ft. Ellsworth (Capt.), 2 fouls, c. Boyd, 1 and 1 foul, ft. Deaton, 2 and 2 fouls, ft. Combs, ft. Syphers, ft. SENIORS, 16 Ward, 2 fouls. Adams, 2 and 1 foul. Clements (Capt.), 1 foul. Hill, 1 foul. Hutchings, 1 foul. Time, 3:10; Referee, Sampson; Timer, Braden.

This is the first time that the new foul ruling has been enforced and at first it caused not a little confusion among the spectators present. Under the new ruling the man committing the foul must do the shooting and if he fails it counts one point to the opposing side, but if he makes a successful shot there is no count.

The Thanksgiving Goose

by Christopher E. Hazard

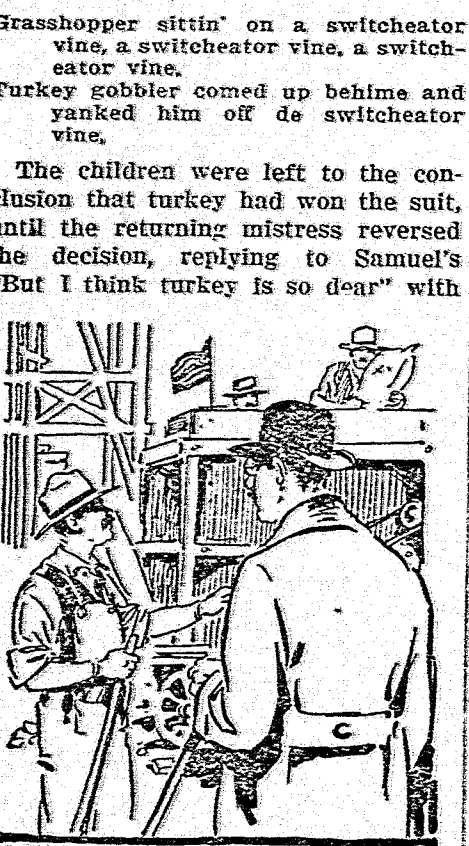

PHRAIM STRUT wrote "The Puritan tradition must be preserved in America," as he labored on his Thanksgiving day oration. "Our country has indeed become a new world, so cosmopolitan is its character, and our task is the Americanization of America. Personal integrity and honest work are the essential elements of our national welfare," he continued.

These laudable and well-expressed sentiments so pleased the author that he was reading the third time when his boy Samuel, surnamed the judge on account of his argumentativeness, and his girl Louise made evident the fact of their disputation under the library window. It appeared that the discussion concerned the material for the approaching feast and that the question was of turkey or goose, arrangements having been made for the traditional bird, but a relative having signified his intention of bestowing as an alternative the mate of a gander. "Father thinks we couldn't be thankful for anything but a turkey. I heard him say that it is as much the emblem of the day as the eagle is of our country," said the judge. "Well," replied his sister, "it doesn't make so very much difference to me what it is as long as there is enough of it and plenty of stuffin', but I think mother ought to settle it, she's the cook." "We'll have a goose anyhow, if you're there," rejoined the ruffled Samuel, but he assented to a change of venue and to bringing the case before the lady of the house, and the court was adjourned to the kitchen.

Mrs. Strut being absent, however, the opinion of Dinah, who was agitating the various constituents of pumpkin and mince pies, was desired. With no result from this busy official but a confirmation of the song that she was singing:

Grasshopper sittin' on a switchator vine,
A switchator vine, a switchator vine,
Turkey gobble comin' up behind me,
Yanked him off de switchator vine.

The children were left to the conclusion that turkey had won the suit, until the returning mistress reversed the decision, replying to Samuel's "But I think turkey is so dear" with the remark "I think it, too." So that they all marched to the goose step when the day came round.

The result rather worried Mr. Strut, however. Combined with the facts that his address had seemingly failed to capture his audience, and that it had given a rather hollow sound even to himself, and the further fact that his concealed disappointment over the absence of his favorite bird had induced a fit of indigestion, was an increasing consciousness that he was himself a member of the talkers' brigade rather than a soldier in the army of tollers at work upon the foundations of a better future. Although unpunctured by age and disability, he was off the road of actual affairs, being of that leisure class that, living upon accumulated competence, spends its time in dissection rather than percussion, out of contact with the hard conditions of the real service of progress.

In the endeavor to walk off his chagrin and dissatisfaction, Mr. Strut came upon a group of Italian laborers and was struck by their hearty and joyous dealing with the question of social progress as they lay in the road making, and a little later he drew near to another force of aliens who were at work upon the foundations of a new building. These last had taken of sand and rocks and cement and poured the mass into a concrete mixer, placing upon the top of the machine an American flag. These concrete illustrations of true Americanism so affected the observer that he might have been heard as he told himself that there was more progress going on than he was actually concerned in, that sand, cement and pieces of Plymouth Rock were still going into the racial material of New America, and that to build American institutions under the American flag was also his business. He even said to himself in his sense of usefulness and humiliation that perhaps he himself had been a Thanksgiving goose.

Maine Pines in Florida

The palm of Florida and the pine of Maine are to be brought closer together in a literal sense for T. Clifford Eastman of this town, owner of the Western Maine Forest Nursery, who has gone to Vero, Florida, to take charge of the nursery of ornamental trees owned by G. E. Cobb of Denmark, has taken with him a thousand of his young pine transplants to set in the soil as an experiment.

Mr. Eastman, after looking over the job which he has before him in Florida this winter, has sent word to his father, James W. Eastman, that he needs a couple of fellows for the season.

WILDERNESS SCENES, HOMES THOUGHTS AND TALKS

Afoot and Alone. Written by Himself

Oh God! Look Down Upon Us Poor Heathens and just See What a Mess We Humans Have Made On This Beautiful Earth. Amen!

You will find people, human beings, more intent on having coal in the bin, and pork in the barrel, and cutting off coupons, and reaching for higher interest, etc. God is a side line, and they will pray for anything if they think there is a $ in it for them.

The great numbers of men working for me seems strange. Only the other day I came across a man away up in the Mts., plowing along the bank of the Great Androscoggin River, helping to feed the world. Alone he was. So was I, too.

Only a little time between snows in this section of the country. Winter, Winter, Winter, more Winter than any other season. Soon the earth will begin to slant away from the direct rays of the sun. I go by the sun, its position, and light on the mountains. The shadow of the pine in the pasture. The shadow of the great rock there. These things tell you of the coming and going of the seasons. And the birds, when they begin to flock. The action of fish. Sounds. All these things are the true expressions of the Great Mystery.

I discovered him sitting on a stump filing the point of a fish hook, the same fishhook I gave him years ago, when I first discovered him repeating most quinine's bills, and dragon fly's wings. With care this hook has lasted him all these years and is still good and strong. With no result from this busy official but a confirmation of the song that she was singing:

Grasshopper sittin' on a switchator vine,
A switchator vine, a switchator vine,
Turkey gobble comin' up behind me,

Bear Mr. Grange Observed Fifty-first Anniversary—Party From South Paris Attended—Dance—Preston Flint in Town—Mrs. May White, D. D. J. C., Inspects White Oak Temple.

Bear Mr. Grange observed its fifty-first anniversary on Saturday, Nov. 21st. The usual fine grange dinner was served at noon, to a large gathering of patrons and their families.

After dinner, worthy lecturer, W. K. Larkin presented a splendid program. There were several fine recitations, piano and violin solos, by the children, also motion songs and an amusing little play with a class of children, one "lady teacher" and two "professors," one of them "always in a hurry," and the other, "fat and good natured, who did not believe in 'hurrying.'" Much credit is due the teachers for their part in drilling the children to take part so nicely. A few of the older members helped to entertain with remarks, songs, and an original paper by Burton Sanderson, and a fine address by District Deputy, Harold Pike.

In the evening there was a real old fashioned dance, where old and young joined in an old fashioned good time.

Mrs. Jennie Haynes, who is staying in Harrison with her daughter, attended the grange anniversary, Saturday; also Mrs. Abbie Adams, from North Bridgton, visited in Waterford over the week end, and attended anniversary meeting.

Mr. and Mrs. Flint and a party of friends from South Paris, came over to the anniversary dance, on Saturday evening.

Health Habits for Children

Early Habits Formed, Improve With Years

Health is a habit which is acquired through daily practice. Thus it is extremely important for the child to acquire these habits. Since habits both good and bad ones, are formed most easily in the young child, it should be the aim of every parent to instill in the child the beginnings of good habits at an early age. Think how easily the little baby forms habits! Isn't it just as easy to teach good, healthy habits as those which have to be broken as the child grows older.

Granting that good health habits should be formed in the child at an early age as possible, let us consider how it is to be done. First put down on paper, the habits you would like to have the child acquire. All kinds, health, work, play, and any other habits which will be helpful to the child. Then begin to have the child do them. For example, you may want to teach the child to brush his teeth every day. At first the mother would have to help the child in doing it. Then gradually he would learn to do it by himself and all the mother would have to do would be to see that he did it every day. After a few times he would do it unconsciously and a habit would gradually be formed. Supervision on the part of the mother is very important. However, the child should not be allowed to skip whatever he is supposed to do. See that he does what he is supposed to do, and that he does it well.

Habits and health are very important essentials in the life of every person, so they should be taught in every home. Teeth. If one wishes to have good sound teeth he must keep them in good order. Children should be taught at a very early age (as soon as they can hold a toothbrush) to brush their teeth at least once a day, preferably three times. Teach the child to brush his teeth well each time. By beginning at so early an age, the habit is well established in the child, and as he becomes older, the act of brushing his teeth becomes an unconscious one. The old theory that "it does not matter how much neglected the first teeth were, the new or permanent ones would be all right," has long ago been proven false. The first teeth play an important part in the formation of the permanent ones. Children should be sent to the dentist at least once a year, for an examination of their teeth. This eliminates the chances of toothaches and decayed teeth, for temporary fillings can be put in which are inexpensive yet satisfactory. The child should have a toothbrush of his own, preferably a child's brush. The kind of paste or powder that is used does not matter. Generally they like the paste that have a mild taste. Some dental floss should be kept on hand to remove particles of food which get lodged between the teeth.

Digestion. Foods are necessary to sustain life. Digestion is what happens when food is taken into the body. Unless proper food is taken into the body, and in the proper way, the digestive system will become upset and may be injured for life. Good digestion is very important to good health in the life of the child, so it is necessary that good food habits be formed in childhood, to insure good health when the child grows older.

Some food habits. The child should not be excited or be allowed to hurry when he is eating. The table conversation should be pleasant and the whole atmosphere of the meal should be happy. Have the child drink at least four glasses of water a day. Water flushes the body and serves as a sort of regulator of temperature. Serve the meals at definite times each day. Irregularity of meals does not help to promote good digestion. Children should eat only the foods that are good for them and which they need. Children should not be allowed to eat between meals without a physician's order.

Bathing. Baths help to regulate the body temperature and in doing so, they prevent the body from taking cold. In the past, Saturday evening baths have been a habit. For some families perhaps, this is the only possible way, but for the majority of homes, this could be changed and a bath given often. A bath before bedtime, refreshes them, and is much better for their health than going to bed without one. In the summer time, the "old swimming hole" serves as an excellent bath for the rural community. Teach the child to always wash his hands and face before a meal. This is very important for dirty hands in a great many cases have been the cause of the spread of disease.

Posture. Teach the child to stand erect. Good, strong lungs are largely dependent upon posture. Develop in him an ideal for which he will strive. (Show him that soldiers and athletes stand erect and are not roundshouldered.)

Eyes and ears. Do not let the child strain his eyes with too much reading. If the eyes have some defect in them, have them attended to by an oculist as early as possible. Do not let the child have glasses provided for the child. Have him keep his ears clean, and teach him not to injure the eardrum in any way, with a sharp object or such.

Laurel. Teach the child to breathe properly through the nose, with mouth closed. Exercise stimulates proper breathing, consequently it is very good for the adult or child to get plenty of outdoor exercise.

Clothing. Have the clothing loose for the child. Keep it clean. Develop in the child the desire to have a neat, tidy appearance. This not only includes clothing, but also good care of the fingernails and hair. Provide plenty of handkerchiefs.

Sleep and air. Plenty of sleep and fresh air are ingredients which help to make healthy children. Don't let the child go to the movies often, for not only child go to the movies often, but also they are they poor for his eyes, but also they keep him from getting the sleep which he needs. For many children too, the result is that they are restless in their sleep at night. Ten hours of undisturbed sleep, at the least should be the goal set for each child.

Post a few rules for the child, which he is to follow, and see that he follows them. Perhaps a star or some little reward offered at first for each day, might be a good inducement for the children to get the habits started.

Dodging Pneumonia

So many lives are destroyed every year by pneumonia, that the Rockefeller Institute for Medical research, a few years ago, undertook an investigation of this disease. Again a special report on the same subject has been issued this year by the Pneumonia Commission of the City of Philadelphia. From each of these medical bodies we have a strong confirmation of the fact that, unless cases of pneumonia are carefully and intelligently handled, there is much danger of the communication of the disease to others. The former states, emphatically, that each case of pneumonia should be regarded as a focus for the spread of the infection and the care of each patient should include measures which have been found serviceable in other communicable diseases, particularly that class of diseases in which the infection is given out from the mouth and nose, and is received by other individuals through these same respiratory orifices.

There are two classes of distributors of the infection of this disease, the first is the person who is suffering an attack of pneumonia, and he often continues to give off his dangerous infection for three or four weeks or longer after convalescence; and the second source of infection are persons who have been in contact, or in close and unguarded association with the pneumonia patient, who has received the infection which multiplies in his respiratory system, but which does not bring down its recipient with an attack of pneumonia. But he may remain sometime as a producer and distributor of pneumonia infection, a so-called "carrier."

Just now, in the office of the State Department of Health, a watch is kept of this disease, and promptly, upon the report of a case or cases of pneumonia, copies of Circular 241, "On Cutting Down the Death-Rate from Pneumonia," is sent to the local health officer reporting, so that there may be to the affected family, instructions which may lessen the danger of the transmission of the infection to others. The precautionary measures, which should be observed, are, briefly stated, the following:

Everything coughed up or discharged from the mouth or nose, should be received in spit cups or on pieces of cloth or paper, and promptly burned.

The attendants on the sick should be as few as possible and they should avoid the inhalation of the infectious droplets thrown into the air by the patient in coughing.

The patient should have drinking and eating utensils all his own, and nothing that has been to his lips should be used by others until it has been sterilized in boiling water. In the same way, handkerchiefs and towels should be disinfected before they are used by other persons.

There is a legal requirement for the reporting of pneumonia to the local health officer, but only the isolation of the patient, not quarantine is required.

MAIL CHRISTMAS GOODS EARLY

Owing to the enormous business the next few weeks, Christmas mail should be started now. The public cooperating with the postoffice department at an early date, will lessen congestion and delay sure to happen during the closing hours.

All parcels must be securely wrapped or packed. If goods are fragile, they should be so marked, and must be crated or securely reinforced. Articles likely to spoil within the time reasonably required for transportation must be marked "perishable." Special delivery stamps will expedite delivery.

In addressing, give street, house number, postoffice box or rural route number. If tag is used, the address and return card should be placed on the wrapper.

Prepay all postage. Parcels must not exceed 84 inches in length and girth combined. Seventy pounds is the maximum weight for delivery locally, and in the first three zones.

Christmas cards are important and should be mailed early to insure timely delivery.

Personal correspondence in closed bundles is not suitable at parcel post rates.

Special delivery is for speed and not for safety. All valuable domestic parcels should be insured. Coin, currency, jewelry and articles of similar value, should be sent as sealed first-class registered mail.
